PUBLISHERS' PREFACE.

The bar of California has been well aware, for a number of years, that many California cases were omitted from the official reports. Every volume of the Pacific Reporter, which, though unofficial, is exhaustive, has contained a number of California supreme court decisions not accessible elsewhere. These cases have run, in the different volumes, from 11 to 94, and on a recent count made up a total of 1,864. (This, of course, does not include those recent cases reported in the Pacific which may appear in the forthcoming volumes of the state reports.) For the convenience of the local bar, we present herewith a table of these cases, with an index showing the law points in the decisions. Lawyers who are not subscribers for the Pacific may not have realized how perfectly and completely the Pacific meets their demand for a trustworthy, prompt, and exhaustive report of their supreme court decisions.

Although these cases have not been published in the official reports, a large number of them have been cited by the California supreme court in subsequent decisions.

Did you ever think——

Of the advantage which the subscriber to the National Reporter System has over the owner of the State Reports in this single respect:

Cases cited from the State Reports can be readily found in the Reporters

By means of Third Label
Tables and other devices.

WHILE . . . . .

Cases cited from the Reporters cannot be readily found in the State Reports,

Because no similar devices
for cross-reference are published for the Reports.

Again——

The Reporters contain all the cases in the State Reports,

Giving every opinion in full.

WHILE . . . . .

The State Reports do not contain all the cases in the Reporters.

The System contains more than 10,000 of these omitted cases already.

Therefore: The Reporters are substitutes for the State Reports.
The State Reports are NOT substitutes for the Reporters.

Systematic Unofficial Reporting

and

The Reporters were pioneers in the matter of prompt, complete, and inexpensive reporting. This everyone admits. But it was at first generally assumed that the State Reports must in some way have a weight which the Reporters lacked, and this view is still fostered by those whose interests lie in having it prevail. It is therefore not out of place to remind Reporter subscribers of the following facts:

As to the weight of the word "official." The official part of a volume of reports is the utterances of the judges. That is what is authoritative. That is the only part that can be cited as a precedent. If the reporter who prepares the volume for publication misstates the law in his syllabus, the reader may be misled, but no one is bound by this mistake. It is clerical in character. No reporter's work is official in the sense of being authoritative. An "official reporter" is simply one who has been officially appointed; but it has also been officially declared, by legislation and by judicial interpretation, that the publication of the decisions of the courts must be open to all, in the interests of public policy. Every publication of such decisions is therefore official. It may be simply stated as follows: The official work of the courts is published in the National Reporter System, under the official authority given to all publishers. The "copy" is furnished in certified form by the officials of the court,—generally by the same clerk who supplies the court reporter with his copy. The plan (originated by the publishers of the National Reporter System) of publishing two editions enables the judges to first read the earliest published report of their opinions in the advance sheets, and to note any corrections or alterations which may be desired for the permanent, bound edition. These features combine to make the reports in the Reporter System as authoritative as any reports can be. The "official reporter" draws a salary from the public treasury, but his work is not otherwise on any different footing from that of any other reporter of the same official opinions, and the common idea that an "official report" must, because of its name, possess some virtue which compensates for dilatoriness and high price, is due simply to a misconception as to which part of the report is official.

The result which has been achieved in the comparatively few years during which the Reporter System has been before the profession is in itself as strong an argument in its favor as any based upon a direct examination. Being unsubsidized, it must depend entirely upon the support of the profession for its continuance, and that support must be conquered against the prejudice which always, with a conservative profession, operates against anything new and heterodox. Furthermore, the competition of older publishers, whose "Reports" were threatened by these new "Reporters," has been of the keenest. Appeals have been made to the professional prejudice in favor of a past order of things, and the very fact that the Reporters were so much cheaper has been turned against them in arguments addressed to the lawyers who were to do the paying. Yet in spite of argument, competition, prejudice, and lack of any state support, the Reporter System is to-day used by lawyers all over the country, is cited in judicial opinions generally, and is so generally to be found in both public and private libraries that a new text-book which does not give the Reporter citations is acknowledged to be at a great disadvantage. The way in which subscribers look at the system is indicated by the letters collected in the pamphlet, "Over Their Own Signatures."

This position could not have been attained without something in the Reporters themselves which exactly met the wants of the profession. It is not their low price alone, for among subscribers are lawyers to whom the price they pay for a needed tool is the secondary consideration. It is rather that low price, promptness of publication, systematic method and completeness, and uniform excellence have all combined to make the National Reporter System the most serviceable aid which has ever been devised for the lawyer in dealing with the case-law problem. It has been a gradual growth, with nothing forced, spasmodic, or unnatural in its development. It has resulted in a great and prosperous institution, devoted to the service of the legal profession, the permanent excellence of which is guarantied by the fact that its continuance depends solely on its own merits.

What a set of the Pacific Reporter gives the California Lawyer.

As to California Reports.

Vols. 1 to 60, Pacific Reporter, give all the cases in vols. 64 to 128 California Reports. In other words, they give the equivalent of the latest 65 volumes; that is, more than half of the complete set of State Reports.

Looking at the number of cases, instead of the number of volumes, we find that vols. 1 to 60, Pacific, contain 8,568 Cal. cases. The 63 volumes of California Reports prior to the Pacific contain 8,063 cases. A set of the Pacific, therefore, gives over 50% of all California Supreme Court cases.

Looking at the present value of these cases, we find that of the California decisions cited by the California court, as shown by the three latest volumes, 69% are cases included in the Pacific Reporter.

In addition to the California cases which are also accessible through the state reports, the Pacific contains 1,864 cases (as listed in this index) which have been omitted from the official reports.

Special front tables enable the subscriber to give the official citation for every decision in the set of Pacific Reporter which has been reported in the official reports, and skeleton cross-reference tables show where to find, in the Pacific, any authority cited from the California Reports by page and volume only, without the title of the case.

As to Other Reports.

Buying vols. 1 to 60 of the Pacific, you secure, in addition to the California matter, a complete substitute for the following 198 volumes of state reports:
